Senate first votes for alley; changes mind

By JULIA PRODIS

Staff Writer

Student senators voted first to maintain funds for the bowling alley at the Student Senate meeting Wednesday night, but then reversed their decision to transfer funds allowing for the construction of a recreation area in its place.

The senate also approved the University Union budget for 1985-86.

Twenty bowling alley supporters came to the meeting at 7 p.m. and pleaded with the senators during open forum to save the bowling alley in the University Union. They held a list of 1,306 signatures of students who want to save the facility.

After extensive debate until 11 p.m., the senate showed its support for keeping the bowling alley by voting against the University Executive Committee's recommendation to transfer $179,310.43 from a Foundation account intended for bowling renovations, such as new lanes and pins, to a UU Revenue Fund where money would be used to build a recreational area in its place. The vote was 10 in favor, 11 opposed to the recommendation.

The bowling supporters, mainly students who use the facility, left shortly after the vote.

Yet by 12:30 a.m., after a ten minute break in the meeting, the vote was reconsidered and the senate voted in favor of the UEC recommendation to transfer the funds with the purpose of building a recreational area, thus doing away with the bowling alley. The vote was 11 in favor, eight opposed and one abstention.

The issue will be put on the Foundation agenda to transfer the funds and will be decided at the June 6 meeting.

President Warren Baker must still approve the removal of the bowling alley.

As to the reason for the re-vote and its result, ASI President Kevin Creighton said, "I can think of a number of senators who weren't fully informed of the issue."

"A key reason that the vote favored the bowling alley the first time is that a lot of students at the meeting were there representing bowling," said Creighton. "The people in support of a recreation area did not know they had to come to the meeting...I think the senate should be above responding to one special interest group that comes out in force."

Creighton said that at the time of the first vote, many of the senators did not realize that this action would hold up the renovation of Mustang Lounge into an eatery. The Rec-Sports offices now occupy part of Mustang Lounge. If a rec area were to replace the bowling alley, Rec-Sports offices would also be put in that space.

ASI Vice President Marcia Godwin attributed the change in vote to "lobbying done during the break."

Senator Earl Ruby, who voted to save the bowling alley in both votes, said of the re-vote, "The senators who voted to tear

Roosters and cows invade UU Thursday

By BRUCE PINKLETON

Staff Writer

The sound of roosters crowing and the smell of cows and fresh hay filled the University Union Plaza May 23 for the third annual Cal Poly Agricultural Awareness Day.

Agricultural Awareness Day was sponsored by Alpha Zeta, the agricultural honor society, to make people aware of different fields of agriculture and the contribution that agriculture makes to society.

Between 10 and 15 displays contained everything from computerized weight machines to Holstein milk cows as hundreds of students got a closer look at what agriculture is all about.

"Aren't they cute?" asked one student as she petted a baby pig in an animal pen sponsored by the Veterinary Science Club. "They're darling!" responded another student.

A display sponsored by the Los Lecheros Dairy Club featured Cissy, an 1,800 pound Holstein cow, and a calf.

Cissy, who eats about 100 pounds of corn silage, beet pulp, cotton seed and barn mix a day, will give about 12 1/2 gallons of milk daily when she is at peak production. In her productive lifetime — about five or six years — Cissy will give enough milk to fill 95,240 eight ounce glasses, said Jeff Wilbur, a 19-year-old freshman dairy science major.

A computerized weight machine sponsored by the Agricultural Engineering Department gave people their weight in pounds and newtons.

Fitzroy Raphael, a 33-year-old mechanized agriculture major from the Republic of Trinidad, was unimpressed when the weight machine told him he weighed as much as a kangaroo.

"I don't know much about kangaroos — it doesn't matter much to me anyway," said Raphael.

On the whole, Raphael felt that Agricultural Awareness Day was positive because it let students know what agriculture is all about. Too many people in California think of agriculture as menial labor, he said. "Professional people should learn a different view of agriculture."

SHIRLEY THOMPSON/Mustang Daily

Cissy the Cow enjoys a change in environment as part of Ag Awareness Day.

In her productive lifetime Cissy will produce about 95,000 glasses of milk.

The Cal Poly Poultry Club attracted a number of people with its display of White Leghorn chicks and other types of chickens and ducks.

The display represented a "variety of the chickens that we have at the (poultry) unit," said Rick Puleo, a 23-year-old senior poultry major.

Gerry Hernandez, a 27-year-old senior agricultural education major and a member of Alpha Zeta said he felt positive about Agricultural Awareness Day.

The day is held "so that people know what's going on (in agriculture)," said Hernandez. "We're not just a bunch of dumb aggies that hang around in our Wranglers and chew."

Poly orientation a model for schools across USA

By SALLY KINSELL

Staff Writer

Last in a series

On the basic level, Cal Poly's Week of Welcome is an orientation program, but it's special in the way that it's run, said the chairman of the WOW Board.

"We really do feel that if we aren't the number one school in the country, we're at least in the top three or four for orientation of students," Mike Benkert said.

Interaction with the directors of other orientation programs from schools across the United States and Canada is made possible each year during a national conference and a regional conference. The entire WOW Board and adviser Bob Walters attend these conferences each year, said Benkert.

"There are not many other schools that have an orientation program like ours," he said. "A lot of schools tend to focus more on academic things; we do focus on academics but the main thing we do different from other schools is try to acclimate the student to their surroundings, try to make them feel comfortable, try to make them feel as if they have a friend as soon as they get here."

He added, "We have a much higher retention rate with the students here at Cal Poly because that is one of the most basic needs everyone has — to feel wanted, to feel like they belong where they are, to have friendship and to feel comfortable."

Allyson Hensel, coordinator for the University of Nevada, Reno student orientation staff said the basis of their program is the same as Cal Poly's. "Cal Poly is our model and we've adapted our program to fit our college," she said.

The University of Nevada is 90 percent commuter so they can't do everything the same, she said. One of the things they don't include in their program is a tour of the town because most of the students actually come from the area.

Hensel added that they are really impressed with Cal Poly's orientation program. "The high energy that they have is something we've tried to get into our group," she said.

Bob Francis, assistant director for New Student Programs at Arizona State University in Tempe, said their orientation program is quite different from Cal Poly's because they provide orientation all year round in one form or another. In addition, they have four off-campus programs in Tucson, New York-New Jersey area, Chicago and Los Angeles. About 3,000 students participate in the out-of-state programs each year, said

Francis.

What Francis said he liked best about Cal Poly's program is "the involvement of people. The organization and enthusiasm is great."

The University of Alberta attended a regional conference this year. Ken MacDonald, director, said they have one-day seminars offered from the end of July through August. Four weekend seminars are also offered, he said. The program covers orientation to the complicated administration, the town, the faculty and deals with topics such as time management and finance, said MacDonald.

MacDonald said that he was "impressed with Cal Poly's enthusiasm and organization."

Bowling Green State University in Ohio offers two programs — one during pre-registration in the summer and another three days before classes begin in the fall, said

Gregg DeCrane, assistant vice-president of student affairs.

The program in the fall is very much like Cal Poly's WOW. Three days before classes begin the students are put in small groups headed by two upperclassmen, said DeCrane. It lasts from Sunday through Tuesday.

Transfer students go through the same program as freshmen do, but in their groups they have transfer students as student leaders, said DeCrane. "We separate them because their needs and concerns are really diverse." At Cal Poly freshmen and transfer students are intermixed.

The WOW Board learns a lot from the other schools that attend the conferences, said Mike Benkert, adding that they come away from the conferences with a very strong feeling that their program is one of the best. "Up to this point we haven't seen anything better," he said.

Student Senate: stick by your decision

The Student Senate changed its mind on one of the most important of current campus issues within a period of three hours Wednesday night.

The issue of the bowling alley surfaced again at the Student Senate meeting when the UEC recommended that over $179,000 in funds being held in a Foundation account be transferred into a UU Revenue account. The Foundation account had the funds earmarked for renovating the bowling alley. Transferring the funds into the UU account would mean using the money for a recreational area in place of the bowling lanes.

In effect, then, in this discussion of the ASI budget, the senators were called upon on this item to give their support for either retaining the bowling alley, or removing it.

In anticipation of this discussion about 20 bowling advocates showed up at the meeting with a petition of 1,300 signatures to continue their rally for support of keeping the lanes intact. In the proponents' presence the Student Senate, in a close 11 to 10 vote, offered its support of the bowling alley.

In hours of discussion senators argued that they the issue was sprung on them without any notice, and that enough information wasn't provided for them to make a good decision.

After a break in the meeting, the Senate came back to reverse its decision. True, the second vote wasn't overwhelming just like the first. And several senators stuck hard to their guns.

But why did the others change their minds?

Did the Senate feel pressure from the bowling proponents and give in to that pressure, only deciding to change its mind once the group left? If so, we commend the small group of bowlers for its ability to persuade.

Or did the Senate simply have a hard time making up its mind?

The senators have had ample time to ponder over information provided by the UUAB, bowling alley advocates and other groups. The claim that not enough information has been provided or made available is hard to swallow.

ASI President Kevin Creighton made this comment to the Mustang Daily after the meeting: "I wish a few of the senators would have done more research. What bothers me most is that many of the senators are not willing to go out and do their own research. They voice opinions not based on research but on feelings. It's kind of scary."

It is kind of scary. The senators ran for those offices with the guise of serving their fellow students. They were elected to make decisions and vote on those decisions, with their fellow students in mind.

To make a decision for thousands of others must include a commitment to unveiling all the facts, searching for answers to questions and questioning what is laid out for the public.

Most of the senators have been serving on the Senate since September. It only seems natural that such a group of leaders would grow into their responsibilities, to recognize them and to tackle them.

Since the idea to remove the bowling alley was made public in February many opportunities were available to do so. The UUAB and Roger Conway, who came up with the idea originally, embarked on several research projects to see if the change would be a sound one. The information they came up with, as well as information gathered by opponents, was presented openly at public hearings and certainly would have been made available to anyone who asked.

But, did the senators ask? The answer seems to be "no."

It's unfortunate that this year's senate is nearing a close with such a difficult test of its responsibility. We had hoped to live with a Senate that would make decisions and stick by them.

Letters

Editor:

I feel I must take issue with the opinion expressed by the white South African student interviewed in Tuesday's Mustang Daily. First and foremost, I believe that the repressive nature of his country's government is clearly exposed by his refusal to be identified. I read "sensitive nature of the South African government" then, as one which is racist and repressive if neither whites nor blacks can speak freely and fear for their safety and be labeled "radicals" because any statements made about their government's policies anywhere in the world, even when those statements are in favor of the South African government and made to a small campus daily. Which government and which papers are giving you a "distorted picture" about what is really happening in South Africa? Who has a greater stake in not telling the world the truth about what is happening to blacks in South Africa today and has been happening for a very long time?

The student goes on to state the classic racist arguments that have been used worldwide to justify racism and persecution and repression of many kinds of people in many different places. He states "no one knows better what is happening than someone who actually lives there." In my opinion, I think that clearly, as a privileged, upper-class white in the paranoid South African society, this student has only dealt with black people on a master-servant level and really has no idea of the political realities of his country. He chooses to disbelieve the evidence and his government doesn't want him to know those realities.

In terms of divestment and black jobs, out of a population of 21 million black, a mere 70,000 are employed by U.S. corporations. Furthermore, because U.S. firms utilize capital-intensive technology, they actually eliminate blacks from the workplace by mechanizing key sectors of the economy. This mechanization of the South African economy by U.S. firms helps the white government decrease its dependency on black labor and keeps blacks out of the labor force.

No, it is not the "pressures of divestiture and tribal differences that have caused violent outbursts" by the South African blacks, rather it is because of the facts of life for the five out of six South Africans who are black. They cannot live or work where they choose, risk jail if they strike for better wages or justice on the job, have no say and no rights to vote in the government that rules them, must carry passbooks at all times, cannot live with their families in "white" cities where blacks must work, are denied access to education (less than half of black adults can read or write, must pay for schooling although it is free for whites, the state pays 11 times more on a white child's education than on a black child's, and only 7 percent of black children finish high school), and earn less than a third of what white workers do.

When I read "the Bushmen are primitive people with no concept of civilized ways," I am reminded of similar comments made by the now-ousted Reagan appointee to the copyright board who was the co-author of a racist book about American Blacks. Again, this is another classic racist argument. Well tell me, how is that blacks can form trade unions in South Africa but they can't "mainstream into civilized society"? Don't tell me, "your Blacks are different than our Blacks." Give me a break.

Now tell me, where are all the black Africans who want into South Africa? And does migration for work equate to validation and support of the racist system of government? Do Mexicans migrating to the U.S. migrate as a statement of support for our government? No, they move because they want jobs which are unavailable in their own countries.

This student clearly refuses to open his eyes and his mind. To dismiss Bishop Tutu as an idiot, to say that "people are not being killed in South Africa," in addition to all the other opinions this student states in this article about the world and South Africa, show me how very far we have to go in this struggle.

We must use our economic strength — as workers, students, consumers and investors — and our political clout as voters and candidates to stop U.S. investment in South Africa and shift it to our communities here at home. Help get our school, city, state, unions, church groups or community groups to pull their money out (or divest) from banks and companies that profit from South African racism. Alternative investments which are socially responsible and equally profitable can and have been made by other colleges and cities. If you would like more information on the issues raised in this letter, there is an information table at the UU plaza everyday from 11 to 12.

Senate debates over MX missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and Senate Republicans admitted Thursday they faced an uphill battle as they tried to pick up enough votes to defeat a Democratic-backed plan to severely restrict deployment of the MX nuclear missile.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We are a few votes short ... and are not certain that we are going to be able to close the gap."

The latest Capitol Hill round in the long fight over the new nuclear weapon centered around a plan that would limit to 40 the number of MX weapons which could be deployed in silos which now house Minuteman missiles.

No time was set for the vote.

Average home cost revealed in study

WASHINGTON (AP) — You can buy almost three houses in Buffalo for what it costs to buy one in Orange County, Calif.

That statistic comes from a survey of median prices of previously owned homes, regardless of size, released by the National Association of Realtors this week.

Half of all homes in Greater Orange County cost $132,000 and that's down 1.1 percent from a year ago, although slightly up from three months ago.

By comparison, half of the homes sold in the first quarter of 1985 in the Buffalo-Niagara Falls area of upstate New York went for less than $46,900.

In a list of 43 major metropolitan areas, it was the only place where the median was below $50,000.

On the high end of the scale, the New York City area was at $125,400; greater Los Angeles at $114,300 and Boston with a median of $108,600 joined Orange County in the six-figure range.

Foundation Board set to meet today

By GREGG SCHROEDER
Staff Writer

Two directors will be elected to the Cal Poly Foundation Board of Directors today at the board's annual meeting. In addition, new officers will be elected and the university president will announce appointed members.

Board Member Lark Carter, dean of the School of Agriculture, will announce the names of nominees for the vacant positions on the board at the public meeting this morning. Carter chaired a nominations committee that included Lezlie Labhard, home economics professor, and Dr. James Strom, vice president of university relations.

Carter said the board is expected to elect the two new directors from the list of nominees. Directors are faculty and staff members who serve staggered three-year terms. There are seven elected directors.

In addition to the elections, University President Warren Baker will announce the new appointed members to the board. As president, Baker has the option to serve on the board and may select from one to three directors from the community for a one year term. He also has the power to pick a student representative to the board.

The meeting will be held in room 409 of the Administration Building at 9 a.m. All board meetings are public.

Swimmers take nationals

Pair wins title using different approach to sport

BY DEBBIE BALL

Staff Writer

They are both Cal Poly students that brought the university recognition for excellence in swimming — but they differ in many ways.

Seniors Brian Wilkerson and Kim Foster have swam their last laps representing the Cal Poly swim team, but not without claiming national titles and entering their names in the university's recordbook.

Wilkerson, who has swam on the team since his freshman year, defended his 200 backstroke NCAA Division II title clocking a school record of 1:53.20. This is an honor the electronics major has captured three years in a row. He also earned All-American laurels on the 11th-place 400 medley relay team (3:13.08) and finished fourth in the 100 backstroke (52.15) at the competition held in Orlando.

Foster, a rookie to the Cal Poly team, finished the national meet with five All-America honors and as the second highest individual scorer. The journalism major's events included the 200 and 400 individual medley (2:09.62 and 4:34.27), with second place finishes in both. She finished fifth and sixth respectively in the 100 and 200 backstroke (1:00.37 and 2:10.78) and participated in the 9th-place 800 relay (7:48.92). All of these times set new Cal Poly records.

Of course all of this is already attainable through examination of the records books, but how they were able to excel in their chosen sport is now the question to be answered.

Starting with Wilkerson, his success seems to be a bit of an accident.

He said he began paddling around the pool when he was about five, but never set out expecting to capture national titles.

He said he joined the Fremont High School swim team in northern California, and became a backstroke because nobody else wanted the job.

Upon completion of his senior year, Wilkerson said he was contacted by the Cal Poly swim coach, and decided that the San Luis Obispo campus was the place he belonged. Once again he fulfilled the backstroke role due to a lack of other volunteers.

Wilkerson's basic attitude towards swimming is to not get uptight.

"I try not to think about it too much," he commented. "Some people get screwed up if they get too psyched up. You have to relax."

He said that he personally likes to concentrate on one or two big meets each season where he "lays it all on the line." This may account for the reason that the backstroke only sets new school records at national competitions.

Wilkerson was also awarded the Cal Poly athlete of the year award for the 1983-84 school year.

He said he happily received the award mainly because it gave the swim team some of the recognition it deserves.

"It always seems we're last on the list for everything," he said. "We are really kind of neglected."

Wilkerson offers the example of having to pay money out of their own pockets in order to attend the national competition. He said they also have to buy their own uniforms, and during his sophomore year was even threatened with the end of the Cal Poly swim program.

However, the backstroke made it through the problems—including three coaches in four years, and says he is glad he stayed at Cal Poly.

Tracy Serpa, coach of the men's and women's swim teams, said her male prep star is the type of person any coach likes to have on a squad.

"He doesn't complain about the hard work," she said, "and he gets along with everyone."

Serpa said Wilkerson has the ability to relieve any stress of others, keeping the swimmers loose.

MARGARET APODACA/Mustang Daily

Swimmers Kim Foster and Brian Wilkerson were both national champions.

She also added that the one remarkable thing about the backstroke's swimming is that it keeps improving—a thing that usually becomes hard with age.

Wilkerson agreed, saying he has been depressed not being able to drop his time during periods of his swimming career, but in college, he seemed to improve with each year.

As for the future, Wilkerson said he has no plans of continuing in water competition—he hasn't even been in the pool since nationals. He said his immediate goal is to obtain his college degree in electronics—a process that was extended beyond the normal four-year program due to his participation on the swim team.

Foster, however, said she has been actively involved in all sports since she was a child—and swimming has been the most emphasized.

She said that after receiving her driver's license, she daily made the trek from her home in Lompoc into San Luis Obispo to work out with a coach that really pushed her to excel.

For her efforts, Foster finished second in the junior division and eighth overall in the nation in 1980. She said this normally would have qualified her for the United States Olympic team, but all hopes were erased by the boycott that year.

Foster said she was then recruited by many universities, and finally decided to attend Florida State University in Tallahassee on a full scholarship.

She swam at the Division I school for three years, capturing All-American titles in the 200 backstroke and relay races in her freshman and sophomore years.

However, she said she did not enjoy life at the university and opted to return to California as a Cal Poly student.

"It's weird," she explained, "when you're on scholarship it's like a job. Swimming had always been for fun, but then it became something I had to do. But in Division II people are there because they want to be, not because they are getting paid."

She also added that at Cal Poly

Spring football: success in the air

Passing offense, a weakness last year, is highlight

BY JANET HASEROT
Staff Writer

Last season, the passing game plagued the offense of the Cal Poly football team.

But if the trends of the Spring Football Game continue into next year, the passing game may be a Mustang strength.

During the Intersquad game last weekend at Arroyo Grande High School, the passing game totaled 445 yards, while the running game racked up 206 yards.

The Green team, coached by offensive line coach Vic Ecklund and defensive coordinator Chris Smeland beat the Green squad 27-3.

The team's offense is much improved over last year said the offensive coordinator.

"This spring was probably one of the best springs offensively in my 18 years at Cal Poly," said offensive coordinator Dave Grosz, who coached the losing white team.

"Our offensive front, led by senior Sal Cesario and sophomore Eric Tautolo, both tackles, has maturity and quality."

Sophomore Robert Perez completed five of 14 passes for 78 yards for the Green, including a 16-yard touchdown pass to tight end Gary Lorge.

Yale Keckin, who split the quarterback duties last season with Jeff Byars, completed one of two passes, including a 67-yarder to speedster Sheldon Moore.

ROSEMARY COSTANZO/Mustang Daily

Senior wide receiver Clark Sorenson can't quite hang on to the pass during spring practice.

Byars has been tabbed the starting quarterback for next year by coach Jim Sanderson. Picking a starting quarterback was one of the team's goals for spring practice, said Sanderson.

Byars completed nine of 14 for 168 for the White squad, but could not score a touchdown. The White team was coached by Dave Grosz and receiver coach John Crivello, and it is the third straight year their team lost.

White fullback Joey Kolina turned four receptions into 61 yards and tight end Mike Anderson caught three for 60 yards.

The only injured player was Green team tailback Tobin Vanscoy. He left the game in the first quarter and his knee injury needed surgery.

"It is tragic to have a player hurt to where he won't be able to play next year," said Grosz.

Lance Martin, also playing for the White, grabbed two passes for 73 yards.

The leading rusher was Jim Glead. He turned 12 carries into 60 yards for the Whites.

The game was held in Arroyo Grande to promote community involvement.

Correction

In an attempt to edit a letter by Dr. Patrick McKim for length, an important point was left out and changed the meaning of the third paragraph. The sentence should have read: "In contrast, the ICR's "Creator" is one who is ready, willing and able to fabricate highly systematic patterns of evidence which make organisms appear to be related to one another when in fact they are not and who has made the earth appear to be vastly ancient when in fact it is no more than a few thousand years old."

she was allowed to swim a variety of races, not just her specialty, backstroke.

Serpa, commenting on Foster, said she is like a dream come true.

"You can always count on her," Serpa said. "She can swim just about any event anytime."

Foster said that she is learned a lot from swimming.

"First I realized I need to set specific goals," she said. "I now think about where I want to be in five years and how to get it. It also taught me that if you really want something you should go for it."

She said that she is presently working towards a career as a sports broadcaster—a profession where she could combine her love for sports and college education in journalism.

"Swimming also taught me to budget my time," Foster continued. With work outs twice a day and an extended swimming season, she said it was definitely necessary to setup and follow a schedule that would allow her to study and still get the sleep she needed to compete.

Foster said she has no plans to retire her suit, and was back in the pool just yesterday.

"I think physical fitness is an important part of life," she said, "and I think swimming is the best exercise."

ASI Hobby Garage

The auto maintenance solution

By SALLY KINSELL
Staff Writer

The car you depend on to get you to school every day has just delivered its last breath. On a limited student budget you know it's impossible to take it to a mechanic and you regret that you haven't taken better care of it. But there is a solution.

The majority of students at Cal Poly seem unaware that there is a student-run garage on campus available for a variety of purposes, ranging from minor tune-ups to engine rebuilds.

The Hobby Garage, located near the entrance to Poly Canyon, is one of the services offered to the Cal Poly community by the ASI. It is partially subsidized by the ASI, but a lot of students aren't taking advantage of services that they are helping to pay for.

Manny Campo, manager of the garage and a mechanical engineering student, said the garage "is a cost-saving facility. If (the students) do their own work it's substantially less expensive than if they go into town and have a mechanic do the work."

Cost for the use of the Hobby Garage is $1.50 for a day pass and $5.00 for a quarter pass, said Campo. He stressed the benefits of the quarter pass, saying it is the least expensive in the long run.

The garage also employs two student assistants, Biff Flynn and Richard Soto to help if needed. "We assist the student from the point of view of how to do the job properly, but it is expected that the student will do the job," said Campo, explaining that the assistants are there for insurance reasons, as students can sue the ASI for injuries. Campo added that they emphasize the safety factors. "In the three years that I've been there, we've never had any injuries."

Currently, the Hobby Garage is lacking in patrons. It has been at Cal Poly for over 20 years, "but not always as complete as it is now," said Campo. The garage offers the students a wide range of tools, equipment and even working space, he said. If a student is working on a long-term project they can rent their own private space in the garage for $3.50 a day in addition to a quarter pass.

One of the disadvantages of the Hobby Garage is its location, said Campo. "We've noticed we're not getting the people in there — we haven't been making as much as we need to." He added that if more students take advantage of the inexpensive services, the garage will improve substantially. "If we make more money we can go to ASI and ask them to increase our subsidy."

The garage began an automotive maintenance class last quarter to attract students. It is offered each quarter and costs $18. The class is taught by Roger Bowman, a 23-year-old junior mechanical engineering student. Four to seven people are required for the class and it meets once a week for two and one-half hours, for a total of five weeks. Students work on their own cars. Bowman said he usually divides the class into two sections.

There is one section for "people with no previous experience and need to be taught everything about the car. I try to teach them the basic skills that they can expand upon if they want. Once you have the basic skills you can go anywhere."

The other section is for "what I call project people," said Bowman. A project person is someone who already knows the basics and perhaps has a car they are restoring and needs a little help.

Bowman said he enjoys teaching the class. "I've got all this knowledge and I enjoy sharing it with people. I think I can present it as clearly or more clearly as some of the books around, or as clearly or more clearly as some of the teachers around."

The Hobby Garage is open on Tuesday 11-5 p.m.; Thursday 11-3 p.m.; Friday 12-5 p.m.; Saturday 11-5 p.m.; Sunday 11-3 p.m.

Two fraternities exercise for charity

Members of two fraternities will be involved this weekend in separate events to raise money for charity.

Six members of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity are scheduled to leave Friday morning for a bicycle ride from San Luis Obispo to Los Angeles to raise money for famine victims in Africa.

This is the third year that the fraternity has bicycled to raise funds for a non-profit organization.

This year the fraternity chose to donate the money they raise to CARE (Cooperative American Relief Everywhere): Campaign for Africa. "The first thing I thought of was USA for Africa," said Michael Williams, organizer for the ride, but the fraternity wanted the money raised to benefit all of Africa, not just Ethiopia.

The members will bicycle to Oxnard on Friday and then to a new CARE office in Los Angeles on Saturday. "With a lot of luck we'll end up making $1,000 but it will probably end up being $500," said Williams.

The group is still seeking pledges and donations for the bicycle ride.

Delta Sigma Phi and SLY 96 FM will be sponsoring a March of Dimes charity run on May 26 at Meadow Park in San Luis Obispo.

The charity races, scheduled to begin at 8:30 a.m., will feature five kilometer, 10 kilometer and half marathon runs.

According to Delta Sigma Phi member Chris Counts, last year's charity run raised more than $600 for the March of Dimes.

He added that nearly 250 runners competed in the race — four times the amount that participated during the first one two years ago.

Jim Bickel, another Delta Sigma Phi member, offered two reasons to run in the races.

"First of all it's great exercise," he said. "Secondly, it's for a good cause, since all the proceeds go to the March of Dimes."

The entry fee for the event is $5, with all proceeds are going to the March of Dimes.

out the bowling alley did not want to sit around all night and re-work the UU budget."

The UU budget, because of time restraints, had to be approved Wednesday night. In the form it was presented, it did not include funds for the maintenance of the bowling alley. If the senate had upheld the first vote to save funds for the bowling alley, the budget could not have been passed as presented.

The meeting ended at 1:30 Thursday morning.
